*The average effective maturity does not take into account the fund's use of leverage. Average effective duration is used to measure the market price sensitivity of the fund's portfolio holdings to market interest-rate changes; duration is expected to change over time with changes in market factors and the time to maturity of the fund's portfolio holdings. Effective duration incorporates certain characteristics of the fund's portfolio holdings, such as yield, coupon payments, price and par value, final maturity (if any) and any call features. Generally, rising interest rates may lengthen the duration of the fund as portfolio holdings with call features may become less likely to be exercised as interest rates rise, making them more sensitive to changes in interest rates. Conversely, decreasing interest rates generally may shorten the fund's duration if any call features of portfolio holdings are more likely to be exercised as a result of such interest-rate decrease, thereby making the fund less sensitive to changes in interest rates. Unlike unleveraged effective duration, leveraged effective duration takes into account the impact of the fund's use of leverage on the potential effect of interest-rate changes on the fund's portfolio and optional call provisions of the fund's portfolio holdings. The fund is not subject to any formal restrictions on its average portfolio maturity or on its average portfolio duration or the maturity of the individual bonds in which it invests.

Includes Percent Leveraged.

¹In addition to Percent Leveraged outstanding (which is financial leverage), the fund participates in inverse floater structures (also referred to as Tender Option Bond programs) which are considered borrowings; please see the fund's most recent shareholder report with respect to, and the fund's participation in, such structures.

²Credit ratings reflect only those assigned by Nationally Recognized Statistical Rating Organizations (NRSROs) that have rated fund holdings. Split-rated bonds, if any, are reported in the higher rating category.

³The market yield is calculated by multiplying the current dividend rate by 12 and dividing by the market price per share of $7.50 on September 30, 2018.

Past performance is no guarantee of future performance, and price, yield and dividend rate will vary.

The use of leverage can magnify the fund's gains and losses.
